Yeah, how festive is that; "here comes the bride, please remain seated!" Just for the record, traditional Jewish ceremonies don't call for the guests to stand, but the guests know that and it doesn't seem weird.

"Stand for the bride?" | Weddings, Etiquette and Advice

The wedding ceremony is often followed by wedding reception or a wedding breakfast, in which the rituals may include speeches from the groom, best man, father of the bride and possibly the bride, the newlyweds' first dance as a couple, and the cutting of an elegant wedding cake.

Wedding - Wikipedia

Traditionally, with the bride's parents' paying for the bulk of the wedding, the father of the bride fronts most of the budget. In addition, brides' dads have picked up additional to-dos along the way.

A Glossary of Who's Who in the Wedding Party

A common conversation I have with brides and grooms is "what side do I stand on?". I really dislike this question, only because it implies there's a correct side and an incorrect side for a bride and groom to stand on in a wedding ceremony, which there isn't.

In Jewish weddings, the bride and groom's parents, as well as all siblings will stand underneath the Chuppah with the bride & groom. The groom can also enter the ceremony from the side of the room followed by the groomsmen, best man and the officiant, an option used in many Christian weddings.

A Guide to Your Wedding Processional Order

The Father of the Bride is traditionally the wedding host and gives the opening speech. He's expected to be warm and welcoming and share a few memories of his daughter. Although more emphasis is often placed on the later speeches, there is still pressure on the Father of the Bride as the opening act to give a strong speech that kicks things off with a bang (rather than a whimper).

How to Rock Your Father of the Bride Speech | Wedding

Traditionally, in Christian weddings, the bride is on the left, and in Jewish weddings, she is on the right. If you're not religious, it doesn't matter.
